Ayisha Robertson

Ayisha is a dedicated family lawyer who has a background in crime. She has an approachable manner and builds collaborative relationships with her clients offering thoughtful advice and guidance throughout the litigation process. Her background in education and MSc in Psychodynamics means her practice lends itself to work with children and vulnerable clients and regularly represents clients with suicidal ideation, learning difficulties and recognised psychiatric disorders.

Public Law

Ayisha passionately represents parents and children, via their guardians, through the spectrum of hearings from EPOs and contested ICOs to final hearings. She too has dealt with DOLs and non-disclosure applications in the High Court. She is trusted by her client's and isn't afraid of giving firm advice when required.

Her notable cases include the representation of a father in a six day fact find and six day final hearing which included the cross examination of a child witness. Such was her success at the fact finding hearing that the Local Authority changed its care plan at IRH to one of rehabilitation of the children to her client's care.

Private Law

In private law Ayisha has successfully negotiated settlements in cases where parties had adopted entrenched positions. She regularly appears in fact finding and enforcement hearings, appeals, non-molestation and occupation orders.
